bracket it, but you need to look right now at what you are inviting people to do with the system and the process. There are others watching to see how you vote on this, and I don't blame them. I want to listen very carefully with my thinking cap on to Senator Dierks' justification for what he is doing to our process. Now all he has to do is say I saw an opening and I ran for it. Anybody might do that, but the rest of us can base our judgment on something more substantial than that. I was asked by people how did these bills get up like they are, and I told them, well, go ask the Speaker, he is the one who did it. That's how they got there, ask him. We need to begin to carry our own weight. If people have questions about things, they ought to ask them of the one who can give the answer. This matter that I'm discussing is something that I feel a personal interest in. I want to prevent the process from being skewed at the outset. What we did this morning was a skewing of the process, in my mind, because that bill we spent the whole morning on should have been pulled off the calendar also. But since people want to play politics with the agenda and with the bills on the agenda, I'm going to play hardball. How much more time do I have, Mr. President, before my time is up here. How many?

SENATOR CUDABACK: Three minutes. Three and a half minutes, Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Oh, thank you. Some people would like to see me run out of this Chamber, and I understand that. I used to say nobody can run me out of this Chamber. In the interest of being totally honest, I have to tell you there are two people, and only two, who can run me out of this Chamber. That's the person who prays in the morning, and the Governor when he gives a speech. Those are the only two who can run me out of this Chamber, and they always will. But no activity on this floor will run me out of the Chamber. I'm not attributing in furor or wicked motives to either Senator Dierks or Senator Erdman. They saw an opportunity. In this instance, the one who is generally deemed Jesse James must put on the sheriff's badge and say, red light, stop. And maybe I can't stop it, but I'm going to certainly delay it, and I'm going to take plenty of time to do it. Thank you, Mr. President.
